Building The Pitch

An effective elevator pitch is a short, compelling summary designed to spark real interest in under a minute. Here's what belongs in every one:

1. A Hook

Open with something attention-grabbing: a surprising fact, a question, or a bold statement.

2. A Clear Value Proposition

Explain what the Summit offers and the specific need it meets for this Scout, Scouter, or family.

3. Know Your Audience

A new Scout, a Scoutmaster, and a parent all need a different angle. Read the room before you pitch.

4. What Makes It Different

The Summit isn't just another camp or trek. Call out what genuinely sets it apart.

5. Keep It Short

Aim for thirty to sixty seconds. Skip the jargon and unnecessary detail.

6. A Clear Next Step

End with something concrete: a brochure, a QR code, a question, or an offer to follow up.

7. Bring Energy

Your own enthusiasm will sell the Summit better than any brochure ever could.

Actively LISTEN for what this Scout, Scouter, or family wants/needs. Then, match that interest to the program that fits best, whether it's a high-adventure trek, a week at Justice National Scout Camp, a training course, or Family Adventure Camp. Hand them a flyer, refer them to summitbsa.org, or simply offer to follow up once they've had a chance to think it over!

Your Sample Pitch

The Summit Bechtel Reserve isn't just Scouting's newest high-adventure base, it's Scouting's biggest stage. Imagine your Scouts ziplining across a mountain valley at fifty miles an hour, running whitewater on the New River, or standing in the same arena that hosted the National Jamboree. Whether your Scouts are chasing their first taste of high adventure or want a full week of traditional camp, there's a program built for them, at every ability level.

The Summit is also home to some of Scouting's best leadership training, including N.A.Y.L.E., Wood Badge, Seabadge, the kind that builds confidence and skill long after the trip ends. And if a family isn't quite ready for a backcountry trek, Family Adventure Camp opens the same mountains to them on their own terms — no uniform, and no Scouting affiliation, required.

This isn't a once-in-a-lifetime box to check off. Between the treks, the camp, the training, the family getaways, and even the winter weekends, it's a permanent, four-season destination your unit can come back to, year after year. If that sounds like something your Scouts are ready for, let's talk about which program fits your crew best. The first step might be as simple as picking a date.
